INTERVIEW NOTES:

POI's demeanor was relaxed. Bored, even. Suspect calmly provided an alibi for time of robbery and stated he had no knowledge of any relevant information.

Informed POI that we have reason to believe his cut of the stolen loot had been squirreled away somewhere in Salem, IN until things cooled off. Suspect remained silent. No noticeable response to the mention of stolen goods. POI then yawned and expressed desire to leave. With no hard evidence, POI couldn't be held and was released.

The following dialogue occurred on his way out and was recorded.

BEGIN TRANSCRIPTION:

Detective: "Why don't you just tell us where it is, Cipher?!"

POI, derisively: "I don't have it, but if I did, I could tell you where it would be and you still wouldn't be able to find it."

Detective, stupidly: "Oh yeah? Ya think so?! Why's that?!"

POI: "Because I'm Lou Cipher, Detective, and you... <smug grin> Well, you're just a cop, aren't you."

Detective, incensed: "Let's find out, Lou! Wanna find out? Or maybe you're afraid to find out?!"

<POI shrugs> POI: "Why not? I'll make it easy for you. Are you ready? Get in your car. Simple enough, right? Drive to the Salem Public Square. Think you pigs can handle that? Park somewhere off the square. Otherwise, you'll be blindly backing out into traffic when you leave. You're welcome. View the courthouse at four o'clock. This isn't rocket science. Consult Ammie Williams. Piece of cake, yeah? Good day, gentlemen."
